DAN KEMATIAN MALAYSIA

 HIGH COURT MALAYA, MELAKA
 MOHD RADZI ABDUL HAMID J
B [CIVIL SUIT NO: MA-24NCvC-60-03-2022]
 2 JANUARY 2024

C Abstract – *The granting of citizenship to a child so as to protect the welfare of the child is conditional upon the satisfaction of the criteria for citizenship in accordance with the law, ie, the Federal Constitution.
Citizenship is not granted merely to serve the child’s welfare.*

D CONSTITUTIONAL LAW: Citizenship – Application for – Citizenship by operation of law – Child born to Sri Lankan mother and given up to Malaysian citizen applicants for adoption eight months later – Birth certificate registered applicants as father and mother but child stated as ‘non-citizen’ – Whether child citizen of Malaysia – Whether acquired citizenship pursuant to art. 14(1)(b) read with s. 1(a) of Part II of Federal Constitution – Whether ‘parent’ ought to be construed broadly to include adoptive parents – Whether Adoption Act 1952 applicable – Whether criteria for citizenship by operation of law met

E CONSTITUTIONAL LAW: Citizenship – Application for – Citizenship by operation of law – Child born to Sri Lankan mother and given up to Malaysian citizen applicants for adoption eight months later – Birth certificate registered applicants as father and mother but child stated as ‘non-citizen’ – Whether child citizen of Malaysia – Whether acquired citizenship pursuant to ss. 1(e) and 2(3) of F Part II of Second Schedule, read with s. 19B of Part III of Second Schedule to Federal Constitution – Whether child abandoned by biological mother – Whether child acquired citizenship of any country within 12 months from date of birth – Whether criteria for citizenship by operation of law met

G STATUTORY INTERPRETATION: ‘parent’ – Application for citizenship – Child born to Sri Lankan mother and given up to Malaysian citizen applicants for adoption eight months later – Birth certificate registered applicants as father and mother but child stated as ‘non-citizen’ – Whether acquired citizenship pursuant to art. 14(1)(b) read with s. 1(a) of Part II of Federal Constitution – Whether ‘parent’ ought to be construed broadly to include adoptive parents
H

I A child was born to a Sri Lankan woman (‘biological mother’) in a hospital and, eight months later, was given up to the plaintiffs, who were Malaysian citizens, for adoption. Upon registration, the child’s birth certificate was marked as ‘bukan warganegara’. The plaintiffs made formal applications to adopt the child and the relevant orders were accordingly granted by the Sessions Court. A new birth certificate was issued where the first and second plaintiffs were registered as the father and mother, respectively, of the child. The new birth certificate, however, was still marked as 'bukan warganegara'. Hence, the present application. The plaintiffs, acting on their behalf and as the litigation representatives of the child, sought, inter alia, an order that the child be declared a citizen of Malaysia on the alternative grounds that the child, (i) having become a child of Malaysian citizens, ie the plaintiffs, under the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952 ('Act'), had acquired citizenship pursuant to art. 14(1)(b) read with s. 1(a) of Part II of the Federal Constitution ('FC'), on the basis that the word 'parent', in para. (a), ought to be construed broadly to include adoptive parents. A beneficent interpretation would prevent the child from being rendered stateless; and (ii) having been abandoned by the biological mother and not having acquired citizenship of any country within 12 months from the date of birth, acquired citizenship pursuant to ss. 1(e) and 2(3) of Part II of the Second Schedule, read with s. 19B of Part III of the Second Schedule to the FC.

Held (dismissing application):

- (1) The court was bound by stare decisis to follow the decisions of Pendaftar Besar Kelahiran Dan Kematian, Malaysia v. Pang Wee See & Anor and CTEB & Anor v. Ketua Pengarah Pendaftaran Negara, Malaysia & Ors and, therefore, could not be persuaded to agree with the plaintiffs that a beneficent reading of s. 1(a) of Part II of the Second Schedule to the FC, together with the provisions of the Act, in particular s. 25A, was permissible, however desirable it may be in the child's interest. Section 1(a) of Part II of the Second Schedule to the FC makes reference only to the time of birth and not at the time the application was made. That requirement was clear and unambiguous. Thus, in determining the status of the child's parents, it was the biological mother's status that must be determined and not the adoptive parents, albeit Malaysian citizens, since there was no adoptive parent at the time of birth. The provisions of the Act had no materiality on the determination of citizenship under the FC; the status of the plaintiffs as the adoptive parents could not be taken into account as of right. To suggest that, at the time of the child's birth, the plaintiffs were already the child's parents would be clearly impossible and contradictory to the plain meaning of the phrase 'at the time of birth'. The biological mother was, in fact, a citizen of Sri Lanka and not a Malaysian. (paras 16, 19, 20, 23 & 25)
- (2) As the biological mother was a Sri Lankan, it could not be said that the child was not born a citizen of any other country. Since the child's father was unknown, the child must be taken to follow the biological mother's citizenship. The burden was on the plaintiffs to show why she was not entitled to Sri Lankan citizenship, which they failed to do. Section 19B presumed that when a child is found exposed, the mother is presumed

- A to be a permanent resident and the finding that the child was exposed shall be the date of birth. Can the child then be said to have been found exposed within the meaning of s. 19B of Part II of the Second Schedule to the FC? The facts did not show any abandonment amounting to leaving the child exposed without any trace of the biological parent. The
- B criteria for citizenship by operation of law under the FC had not been met. (paras 26, 28, 30, 33 & 37)

Mohd Radzi Abdul Hamid J:Introduction

[1] This is the grounds of decision of this court in respect of an application filed by the first and second plaintiffs acting on their behalf and as litigation representatives of a minor child named RAPD (name redacted to maintain anonymity) ('child') for a principal order under para. 1 of encl. 37 that the child be declared a citizen of Malaysia pursuant to the operation of art. 14(1)(b) read together with s. (1)(a) under Part II and s. 19B under Part III of the Federal Constitution ('FC') or alternatively, pursuant to the operation of art. 14(1)(b) read together with s. (1)(e) and 2(3) under Part II of the Second Schedule of the FC ('application'). In addition to that principal order, the plaintiffs further seek relevant consequential orders as set forth in paras. 2, 3, 4 and 5 therein.

Background Facts

D

[2] The child was born on 14 March 2019 to a woman known as DMPK ('the biological mother') at Hospital Sultanah Nora Ismail, Batu Pahat in the State of Johore. Some eight months later, on or about 24 November 2019, both plaintiffs were informed of the biological mother's desire to give up the child for adoption. An agreement was struck on the same day between them when the biological mother agreed to surrender all her parental and guardianship rights to both plaintiffs who would adopt the child as their own. Both plaintiffs are husband and wife and are Malaysian citizens.

E

[3] Since the birth of the child was not registered at the time of birth, a late registration of the birth was done by the plaintiffs on 24 November 2019 and a birth certificate dated 21 July 2020 was issued by Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara. In that certificate, the biological mother was identified as a Sri Lankan citizen bearing passport No. N5224496. At the time of giving birth, she was 37 years old. The biological father of the child is not known. The certificate was marked as 'bukan warganegara' ('first BC').

[4] Both plaintiffs then filed formal applications to adopt the child and the relevant orders were granted by the Melaka Sessions Court on 28 October 2020. Following that order, a new birth certificate was issued dated 12 April 2021 wherein the first plaintiff is registered as the father and the second plaintiff as the mother. However, the New BC was marked as 'bukan warganegara' ('New BC'). Thus, the reason for the application.

A The Law On Citizenship

[6] It has been decided in a string of cases and reiterated in the Court of Appeal decision in Pendaftar Besar Kelahiran Dan Kematian, Malaysia v. Pang Wee See & Anor [2017] 7 CLJ 33; [2017] 3 MLJ 308 and the recent Federal Court decisions in CTEB & Anor v. Ketua Pengarah Pendaftaran Negara, Malaysia & Ors [2021] 6 CLJ 471; [2021] 4 MLJ 236 and CCH & Anor v. Pendaftar Besar Bagi Kelahiran Dan Kematian, Malaysia [2022] 1 CLJ 1; [2021] MLJU 2321 that the law on citizenship are exclusively provided in the FC. In delivering the decision of the court in CCH (supra), Her Ladyship the Chief Justice Tengku Maimun set out a reminder on how such provisions are to be interpreted:

[46] Citizenship no doubt is governed by Part III of the FC, but it is also a concept so inextricably linked to the right to life and personal liberty contained in art 5(1). As such, any provisions on it must be construed as widely as possible.

D [47] Having said that, we are completely mindful of the following warning by Abdoolcader J (as he then was) in Merdeka University Berhad v. Government of Malaysia [1981] 2 MLJ 356, at p 360:

E 1 said in Public Prosecutor v. Datuk Harun bin Haji Idris & Ors [1976] 2 MLJ 116 ... that the Constitution is not to be construed in any narrow or pedantic sense (James v. Commonwealth of Australia [1936] AC 578) ... but this does not mean that a court is at liberty to stretch or pervert the language of the Constitution in the interests of any legal or constitutional theory, or even, I would add, for the purpose of supplying omissions or of correcting supposed errors. (emphasis added)

F [48] The courts have always had to do battle with these two conflicting principles. On the one hand, it is said that the Judiciary cannot purport to usurp the role of the Legislature. On the other hand, it is said that the Judiciary must be proactive to protect fundamental rights. No matter the argument, we are constantly reminded of these fears and/or duties by both sides taking their respective positions in constitutional cases. Where do we draw the line between these two extremes?

G [49] We believe that the answer to the question has been discussed an innumerable amount of times with the most recent being CTEB. The starting point is the understanding that fundamental rights and provisions must be construed as broadly as possible. Next, provisions which limit those rights must be construed as narrowly as possible. Finally, judicial precedent must play a lesser part when construing constitutional provisions. One cannot afford to be pedantic or cling helplessly to tabulated legalism.

H [50] When construing a word or words in the FC protective of or guaranteeing a fundamental right, the court should give their widest possible meaning without changing or warping the 'base' meaning. And when construing interrelated provisions, the court should read them as a whole having regard to the purpose and intent of those provisions and harmonise their collective meaning rather than put them at odds with another.

A

[7] On the subject of rules of interpretation of the provisions of the FC, the Federal Court in Dato' Seri Ir Hj Mohammad Nizar Jamaluddin v. Dato' Seri Dr Zambry Abdul Kadir; Attorney General (Intervener) [2010] 2 CLJ 925; [2010] 2 MLJ 285 held:

One other important guide in interpretation of Constitution is that, "The Constitution must be considered as a whole, and so as to give effect, as far as possible, to all its provisions. It is an established canon of constitutional construction that no one provision of the Constitution is to be separated from all the others, and considered alone, but that all the provisions bearing upon a particular subject are to be brought into view and to be so interpreted as to effectuate the great purpose of the instrument. An elementary rule of construction is, that if possible, effect should be given to every part and every word of a Constitution and that unless there is some clear reason to the contrary, no portion of the fundamental law should be treated as superfluous. (See Danaharta Urus Sdn Bhd v. Kekatong Sdn Bhd (Bar Council Malaysia, intervener) [2004] 2 MLJ 257).

Deliberations And Decision Of This Court

[8] It is the plaintiffs' case that the child is a citizen of Malaysia by operation of law on two alternative grounds:

- (i) firstly ('first ground'), pursuant to the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952, the child having become a child of Malaysian citizens, acquires citizenship under s. 1(a), Part II of the FC; or
- (ii) secondly ('second ground'), the child having been abandoned by the biological mother and not having acquired citizenship of any country within 12 months from the date of birth, acquires citizenship pursuant to s. 1(e) and s. 2(3) of Part II, Second Schedule read together with s. 19B of Part III, Second Schedule.

On The First Ground

[9] It was contended by counsel for the plaintiffs that the child ought to be accorded citizenship pursuant to art. 14(1)(b) read with s. 1(a) of Part II on the basis that the word "parent" in para. (a) therein ought to be construed broadly to include adoptive parents. It was further argued that the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952 that is, s. 9(1) and 25A which confer full legal rights on adoptive parents, are conclusive proof of the identity of the child's parent "for all purposes". It is the plaintiffs' contention that the phrase "for all purposes" means and includes the purposes of acquiring citizenship under s. 1(a) of Part II.

- A [10] To advance the plaintiffs' cause, counsel referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Madhuvita Janjara Augustin (Suing Through Next Friend, Margaret Louisa Tan) v. Augustin Lourdsamy & Ors [2018] 4 CLJ 758; [2018] 1 MLJ 307 where the word 'parent' was interpreted broadly to include adoptive parents and not restricted to biological parents.
- B [11] It was further argued that this court should adopt a beneficent interpretation of the meaning of 'parent', such that parent can also mean lawful parents such as adoptive parents and not just biological parents. Since a legal adoption accords the adoptive parents' status as parents, the law, in particular s. 1(a) should not discriminate between biological and adoptive
- C parents. A beneficent interpretation, if adopted by this court, would prevent the child from being rendered stateless and the family unit would be allowed to grow peacefully unburdened by all the social and legal stigma and challenges that the child would otherwise face growing up as a stateless person. Reference was made to the decisions in Minister Of Home Affairs v. Collins Macdonald Fisher [1980] AC 319; Eastern Health Board v. An Bord Uchtala [1994] 3 IR 207 and Indira Gandhi Mutho v. Pengarah Jabatan Agama Islam Perak & Ors And Other Appeals [2018] 3 CLJ 145; [2018] 1 MLJ 545.
- D [12] In response, counsel for the respondents argues that in any determination of citizenship under the FC, both principles of jus soli and
- E jus sanguinis of the biological parent and not the adoptive parent must be proven by the applicant. Reference was made to the Court of Appeal decisions in Lim Jen Hsian & Anor v. Ketua Pengarah Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara & Ors [2017] 8 CLJ 412 and Than Siew Beng & Anor v. Ketua Pengarah Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara & Ors [2017] 8 CLJ 16; [2017] 5 MLJ 662. It was
- F argued that the plaintiffs in this application failed to discharge the burden of proving jus sanguinis since the biological mother was a Sri Lankan.
- G [13] In approaching this issue, this court refers to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Pendaftar Besar Kelahiran Dan Kematian, Malaysia v. Pang Wee See & Anor [2017] 7 CLJ 33. That decision is important because it dealt with the same principal issues brought up by counsel for the plaintiffs. To state it briefly, the Court of Appeal held that:
- H (i) the law on citizenship is contained, both procedurally and substantively in the FC itself, the constitutionality of the FC is considered from the perspective of the Constitution and it is not to be interpreted by reference to other statutes, even if they were passed by the Parliament;
- I (ii) the word 'parent' only means biological parent and does not extend to include adoptive parent, and if the parent is to include adoptive parent, the FC would have expressly provided so;

- (iii) it is a flawed argument to say that the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952 provided the missing link in interpreting the word 'parent' in s. 1(a), Part II, Second Schedule; A
- (iv) the scheme of the provisions under the Adoption Act 1952 does not extend into the realm of the FC in matters of citizenship; B
- (v) that in determining the citizenship of a person, both the principles of jus soli and jus sanguinis must be proved; and
- (vi) in respect to the principle of jus sanguinis, it falls upon the applicant to prove that at the time of birth, one of his parents was either a Malaysian citizen or a permanent resident in Malaysia. C
- [14] The application of both principles of jus soli and jus sanguinis at the time of birth in the determination of citizenship as elaborated by His Lordship Abang Iskandar JCA (as he then was) in Pang Swee See (supra) was referred to with approval by the Federal Court in CBET (supra). D
- [15] More importantly, the Federal Court in CBET (supra) did not approve the Court of Appeal's broad interpretation in Madhuvita (supra) on the meaning of 'parent' to include non-biological parents such as adoptive parents and that decision must be taken to have been overruled (see Pegum Negara Malaysia & Anor v. Go Fu Seng & Other Appeals [2022] 9 CLJ 336; [2022] MLJU 1914). E
- [16] On that basis, this court is bound by stare decisis to follow the decisions in Pang Swee See (supra) and CBET (supra) and therefore, cannot be persuaded to agree with the plaintiffs that a beneficent reading of s. 1(a), Part II, Second Schedule together with the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952, in particular s. 25A, is permissible, however desirable it may be in the child's interest. F
- [17] Coming back to the facts in this application and applying Pang Swee See (supra), the issue to be determined is whether the plaintiffs have satisfied both parts of s. 1(a) of Part II, Second Schedule, that is, that the child: G
- (i) was born in Malaysia; and
- (ii) that at least one of the child's parents one is at the time of birth either a citizen or permanently resident in Malaysia. The first requirement is satisfied by the fact that the child was born in Batu Pahat, Johore. The second requirement bears to be proven. H
- [18] Now, as decided by the Federal Court in CTEB (supra) the fundamental rule in interpreting the FC or any written law is to give effect to the intention of the framers. The court cannot insert or interpret new words into the FC. The court may only call-in aid of other canons of construction where the provisions are imprecise, protean, evocative or can reasonably bear more than one meaning. I

- A [19] Section 1(a) of Part II, Second Schedule makes reference only to the time of birth and not at the time the application is made. That requirement is clear and unambiguous. Thus, in determining the status of the child's parent, it is the biological mother's status that must be determined and not the adoptive parents, albeit Malaysian citizens, since there is no adoptive parent at the time of birth. To suggest that at the time of the child's birth, the plaintiffs were already his parents would be clearly impossible and contradictory to the plain meaning of the phrase "at the time of birth".

- C [20] It is clear from the evidence that the biological mother's citizenship and passport were identified in the first BC. The fact that the citizenship and passport number were stated in that document must mean that the passport was within the biological mother's possession or known to the plaintiffs since the first BC was issued after the plaintiffs took steps to adopt the child. There can be no other explanation where that information came from. On that consideration, this court finds on the balance of probabilities that she was in fact a citizen of Sri Lanka and not a Malaysian.

- D [21] This court does not find the plaintiff's additional affidavit in encl. 38 assists the plaintiffs since there was no inquiry made to the Sri Lankan embassy on the citizenship status of the biological mother based on the passport number.

- E [22] There is also no evidence that the biological mother was a permanent resident of Malaysia. Although she was in Malaysia at the time of giving birth to the child, there is no evidence that she had entered Malaysia legally or that her presence in Malaysia was as a permanent resident. There was no inquiry made with the Malaysian Immigration Department on the biological mother's entry into Malaysia or her status.

- F [23] Based on the above, I find that the plaintiffs have failed to discharge the burden of proving that the biological mother was either a citizen of Malaysia or a permanent resident. For all the reasons discussed above, this court finds no merit in granting the order of citizenship under the first ground.

Second Ground

- H [24] The plaintiffs' contend firstly that, given the fact that the New BC was issued, this court should accept that the child's parents are Malaysians and that the child has not acquired the citizenship of any other country. It was argued that s. 1(e) is concerned with only where the child was born and whether the child is stateless.

- I [25] Since this court is bound by the decisions in Pang Swee See (supra) that the provisions of the Adoption Act 1952 have no materiality on the determination of citizenship under the FC, the status of the plaintiffs as the adoptive parents cannot be taken into account as of right. The plaintiffs still carry the burden of proving that the child was not born a citizen of any other country.

[26] On finding that the biological mother is a Sri Lankan, it cannot be said that the child was not born a citizen of any other country. As held by the Court of Appeal in Than Siew Beng & Anor v. Ketua Pengarah Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara & Ors [2017] 8 CLJ 16; [2017] 5 MLJ 662, it fell upon the applicant to prove his lineage under the principle of jus sanguinis. In that case, both the applicant's biological parents were unknown and no evidence was offered to prove the lineage of the biological parents. Since the lineage could not be proven, the applicant failed to satisfy s. 1(e) of Part II, Second Schedule despite spending his life within the Federation:

[35] A plain reading of paragraph 1(e) "was not born a citizen of any country" refers to the relationship of the second appellant to his biological and lawful parents at the time of his birth. The only available documentary evidence – the second appellant's birth certificate (Exhibit TSB-6) contained no information pertaining to the biological parents and the relevant particulars were endorsed with "Maklumat Tidak Diperolehi".

[36] Since the identity of the child's lawful and biological parents are unknown, it is not possible to determine the lineage of the second appellant that would enable the second appellant to be conferred citizenship by lineage ie, jus sanguinis.

[37] Thus in our view, the second appellant has not fulfilled the requirement to be a citizen by operation of law within the meaning of paragraph 1(e) of Part II of the Second Schedule of the Federal Constitution. (Refer to Chin Kooi Nah v. Pendaftar Besar Kelahiran dan Kematian Malaysia [2016] 7 MLJ 717.)

[38] We cannot accept the contention of the appellants that the evidence that the second appellant was born in the Federation and had resided in the Federation II his life, as well as the absence of particulars on the second appellant's birth certificate in respect of his lineage can be construed as sufficient proof that the second appellant "was not born a citizen of any country". As was stated earlier, what is required is evidence of the second appellant's lineage, which evidence is absent.

[27] The decision in Than Siew Beng (supra) was referred to in the recent High Court decision in Farah Hani Sukorv. Ketua Pengarah Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara Malaysia & Ors [2023] 1 LNS 898; [2023] MLJU 993, where like in the present case the identity of the father is unknown and the biological mother gave birth to the applicant in Malaysia. The issue that arose there was whether she was a citizen of Malaysia. The High Court found that there was confusion as to the actual citizenship status of the biological mother, whether the fact that she had a red identity card meant that she was a permanent

A resident or whether she was a citizen of Singapore. On that basis, the High Court held that the biological mother was stateless and granted the application for citizenship.

[28] In contrast, the facts in the present case show no confusion as to the type of document referred to in first BC. The biological mother was, at the time of the child's birth, a Sri Lankan citizen. It must also be said that there is no evidence that the plaintiffs made any inquiry on the background and citizenship of the biological father when they were in the process of reaching an agreement with the biological mother on the adoption. It is quite inconceivable that no inquiry was made on that matter to ascertain the right of the mother to unilaterally surrender the child for adoption. Thus, this court finds that there was insufficient effort, perhaps even a wilful neglect, by the plaintiffs to ascertain that fact. Therefore, this court finds that the facts in Farah Hani Sukor (supra) distinguishable. Since the father is unknown, the child must be taken to follow the biological mother's citizenship. The burden is on the plaintiffs to show why she is not entitled to Sri Lankan citizenship, which they failed to do.

[29] In Azimah Hamzah v. Ketua Pengarah Jabatan Pendaftaran Negara & Anor [2023] 3 CLJ 475; [2023] 3 MLJ 227, the Court of Appeal held that:

E [20] ... if the blood line or parentage can be ascertained, as in this case, then the appellant's nationality at her time of birth can be determined by reference to the nationality of her parents. Her lineage and the citizenship laws governing her parents' nationality would be relevant to determine whether or not the appellant fulfils the requirement that she 'was not born a citizen of any country'. In that event, the appellant though bom on F Malaysian soil, would be a person born a citizen of another country, ie Cambodia, by virtue of the principle of jus sanguinis. Hence, she would not be stateless at the time of her birth.

[30] Moving on, can the child be said to have been found exposed within the meaning of s. 19B of Part II, Second Schedule? Section 19B presumes that when a child is found exposed, the mother is presumed to be a permanent G resident and the finding that the child was exposed shall be the date of birth.

[31] Reference was made to the Federal Court decision in CCH & Anor v. Pendaftar Besar Bagi Kelahiran Dan Kematian, Malaysia [2022] 1 CLJ 1; [2021] MLJU 2321 where the meaning of the term 'exposed' under s. 19B H was discussed:

[53] The operative words in s 19B are 'any new bom child found exposed in any place'. The purpose of this section, when read in context, must be to cover new born children who are left and discovered in a place without any trace of their biological parents. We take judicial notice of the harsh realities of life: this includes new bom children left abandoned near I dumpsites, baby hatches, public or school toilets, places of worship and so on. A literal meaning of 'exposed' suggests a new born child who was 'discovered' exposed at any of these locations.

[54] As such, the broadest possible interpretation of the word ‘found exposed’ is to accord it a meaning to include a child abandoned at the place of birth by the birth mother whose identity is unknown. The operative word ‘exposed’ in s. 19B must therefore encompass the plight of abandoned new born children, otherwise the overarching intent of preventing statelessness would be defeated or rendered illusory.

(emphasis added)

[32] In light of that definition, can the child be said to have been abandoned or exposed? The respondents contend that the facts of abandonment were not proven by the plaintiffs.

[33] The facts here show that after the child was born, the child remained with the biological mother up until the plaintiffs met her some eight months after she had handed the child to them. Thus, unlike in CCH (supra), the mother remained with the child until she was given up for adoption. In this court’s view, those facts do not show any abandonment amounting to leaving the child exposed without any trace of the biological parent.

[34] Since this court does not find that the child was found exposed, both presumptions under s. 19B Part II, Second Schedule, that is:

- (i) the child is born to a mother who is permanently resident at the place where the finding was made (the jus sanguinis presumption); and
- (ii) the date of the finding is taken as the date of the birth, cannot be triggered in favour of the plaintiffs. It is a principle of law that for a presumption to apply, the fact or condition triggering the presumption must first be proved. As was stated by Thomson CJ in Ng Kim Huat v. PP [1961] CLJU 73; [1961] 1 LNS 73; [1961] 1 MLJ 308 referred to with approval in Dato’ Sri Mohd Najib Hj Abd Razak v. PP [2022] 1 CLJ 491; [2022] 1 MLJ 137:

It is surely elementary to observe that while a statutory presumption when it arises may operate in place of evidence and so reverse the onus of proof on any point, the bare potential existence of such a presumption cannot of itself dispense with proof of any fact the existence of which is a condition precedent of the presumption arising. To say otherwise would be to fly in the face of all the rules of logic.

[35] On the issue that this court should adopt an interpretation of the law that will be in the interest of the child, this court cannot disagree that the non-granting of citizenship to the child will pose challenges to the plaintiffs as parents, the child as an individual and both the plaintiffs and the child as a family unit. However, it would be necessary to quote what was said by Rohana Yusuf PCA in delivering the Federal Court’s decision in CTEB (supra):

A [22] Learned Counsel for the Appellants, Dr Cyrus Das impressed upon us to bear in mind two main principles in construing the relevant constitutional provisions. First, to adopt an interpretation enabling the availing rights. He submitted that in the process of interpreting B constitutional provisions to the citizen, it should be done in ways so as to enable availing right be given and not to deny or denude them, citing in support the Supreme Court of India in Post-Graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research v. K.L. Narasimhan [1997] AIR 3687 (SC).

[23] The second principle is where it involves the welfare of a child, any likely breakup of the family unit will be relevant. He then cited Lord Wilberforce in Minister of Home Affairs v. Fisher [1980] AC 319 which C emphasised on family unity and non-separation of a child from the family.

[25] The point to be noted is, this is not a case where conferment of the rights of citizenship was made to the children merely to ensure no family break up. No country in the world will grant citizenship to anyone without meeting the required criteria and family breakup may be a consideration D but not the reason or criteria accepted. Thus, what the Court did in that case was only to allow them to stay in Bermuda till they reach 18 years old.

[26] Nobody can disagree that family should not be separated. However, the issue before us is whether avoiding family separation necessarily entitled the child in this case to a citizenship by operation of law. I am E not saying that he cannot be a citizen pursuant to Article 15. The non-separation principle may be relevant for the authorities to consider in the exercise of its discretion pursuant to Article 15. That is where the requirement of discretionary power sets in. Hence, I do not find the case of much help to advance the principle of law on family separation in the context of this appeal.

F (emphasis added)

[36] On the same tone, this court opines that the mischief of granting citizenship to the child so as to protect the welfare of the child is conditional upon the satisfaction of the criteria for citizenship in accordance with the law. Citizenship is not granted merely to serve the child's welfare. The child G is now blessed with the presence of the first and second plaintiff as parents who will nurture and raise the child with love and care and this court is certain that they will do their utmost best in the meantime to provide the child with the best environment until an application is made under art. 15 of the Federal Constitution.

H
Conclusion And Decision

[37] Based upon all the above, the court finds that the criteria for citizenship by operation of law under the FC have not been met. The application is hereby dismissed with no order as to costs.
